With advancements in technology and increasing customer demand, more and more financial institutions are seeking secure methods to enable customers to open deposit accounts without actually visiting a local branch. The emergence of e-signatures and digital signatures has made the prospect of opening accounts remotely a more attractive prospect, at least for existing customers.

However, due to the complexities of digital signature technology, it is imperative that financial institutions understand this area thoroughly and engage in careful planning before deploying online account opening services.

Join us for this Webinar as we discuss the need to implement a process to enable customers to open deposit accounts remotely while at the same time ensuring that the electronic communications, contracts and electronic signatures are legally binding and enforceable.

We will also cover various legal requirements, including the E-SIGN Act, the California Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, known as Cal ETA, and the MOBILE Act.

HIGHLIGHTS

- E-signatures and digital signatures
- Laws governing e-signatures, e-contracts and e-records
 - E-SIGN Act
 - California Uniform Electronic Transactions Act (Cal ETA)
 - MOBILE Act
- Electronic disclosures in deposit operations
- Opening business accounts vs. consumer accounts
- Record retention issues
